Comment - Unsustainable spending coupled with excessive debt puts Virginia taxpayers in a downward spiral unlike what they would normally have to adjust to in their own personal finances. With the estimated figures of in excess of 400k new recipients under this expansion proposal, it's a financial catastrophe waiting to happen for a state (unlike the federal budget) whose constitution requires a balanced budget. There is a line of demarcation, which once crossed, becomes irreversible and unsustainable for those who are forced to pay for those unable to pay. Until revenue streams are identified to pay for this horrific expansion without tax and fee increases, your direction from this 72 year-old taxpayer from Virginias Beach says no. As a sidebar, 40 percent of the current VB school population is on a free and reduced meal program, which tell me that the personal finances of Virginia families are already in a precarious position.
