The health and welfare of all Virginia citizens is important and not an option. A decision not to expand Medicaid is a form of rationing. The result is that a large number of citizens have no reliable access to health services. The emergency room is not an option for continuing care. A free clinic is not an option in many parts of our state. Many commentators on your site seem to be saying that health care is optional. Arguments that those men, women and children on Medicaid have worse health outcomes than men, women and children without medical services is specious, disturbing and defies our humanity. Barbara.
