First Name - ChristineLast Name - FaiaOrganization Name - (Hospice Director, retired)

Comment - As a retired healthcare administrator, who worked with patients in acute psychiatric and medical care as well as hospice, I can tell you that there are many working Virginians who cannot afford medical insurance and who do not receive preventive care. Expanding Medicaid services to this population would save lives and save taxpayers' money, so it is not only the most humane approach to a compelling human need, but a cost-effective one.
